Investment Perspectives

Market

Global equity markets posted another month of gains as comments from US Federal Reserve Chairman Powell comforted investors. He indicated that the Fed would move more slowly than expected to reduce its asset purchase program. This support seemed to offset concerns that rising COVID-19 cases, driven by the Delta variant, would dampen economic growth. All regions in the MSCI ACWI delivered positive returns. In Emerging Markets (EMs), China managed to end the month flat after a sharp initial decline due to tighter regulations across several sectors. By sector, Financials led market returns, while increasing expectations that commodity prices will decline due to weaker demand kept a lid on the Materials and Energy sectors.

Portfolio

Companies with leading competitive positions and strong pricing power over their customers are often able to do well in an inflationary environment, as they can pass along rising costs to customers. Indeed, two of our Information Technology (IT) holdings announced significant price increases in August. Microsoft plans to increase prices by 10–15% for its most popular Office 365 software options, while semiconductor foundry TSMC is reportedly planning price hikes of 10% for its most advanced chips and 20% for its less advanced models. These companies joined PayPal, which in June announced it was raising the fees it charges merchants for transactions.

- In IT, software companies Synopsys and Workday both raised their full-year guidance after reporting stronger-than-expected sales growth. Dutch payments processor Adyen reported strong revenue growth, especially in North America.
- We underperformed in EMs, as nearly all of our Chinese holdings detracted from returns. Shares of gaming company NetEase, property manager Country Garden Services, and Alibaba each declined in response to regulatory crackdowns by the Chinese government.
- In the US, enthusiasm for e-commerce stocks boosted shares of Etsy and eBay, though the latter reported lower-than-expected revenues for the second quarter.

- In IT, PayPal reported strong growth as it continues to roll out new features, while Adobe reported accelerating growth due to strong demand for its Creative Cloud and Document Cloud offerings. Conversely, shares of remote-work software company TeamViewer fell on market concerns that growth will slow as more employees return to the factory floor.
- In the US, Alphabet, which experienced accelerating advertising demand, and IT services company EPAM, which reported robust sales growth in demand for digitalization projects, boosted returns.
- In EMs, Brazil's COVID-19 struggles weighed on Itaú Unibanco. Polish video game developer CD Projekt, still impacted by last year's botched Cyberpunk 2077 launch, detracted.
